

Transformative Pedagogy and Online Adult Education

Authors : Glenn A. Palmer, Lorenzo Bowman, Juanita Johnson-Bailey

Abstract : The ubiquitous economic upheaval that has gripped the global environment in the past few years displaced many workers through unemployment or underemployment. Globally, this disruption has caused many adult workers to seek additional education or skills to remain competitive, and acquire the ability and options to find gainful employment. While many learners have availed themselves of some opportunities to be retrained and retooled at locations within their communities, others have explored those options through the online learning environment. This paper examines the empirical research that explores the various strategies that are used in the adult online learning community that could also foster transformative learning.

Keywords : online learning, transformational learning, adult education, economic crisis, unemployment

Conference Title : ICELET 2014 : International Conference on e-Learning and e-Teaching

Conference Location : Paris, France

Conference Dates : November 21-22, 2014