

The Role of International Organizations in Educational Reform in Iraq

Authors : Thanaa M. Sulaiman

Abstract : The Iraqi education system has suffered greatly as a result of wars, political instability, and economic problems. After the fall of Saddam's regime in 2003, the Iraqi education system was proportionally the most impacted sector. The new administration prioritized educational reforms. International organizations, as well as foreign countries, were in the lead to achieve educational reforms. The current study aims to shed light on the reformation process and the roles of different stakeholders, especially international organizations. It also aims to explore the current problems facing the Iraqi education system. Additionally, it aims to explore the different programs and projects that are funded and implemented by international organizations and the impact of these programs and projects.
