

The Effects of Globalization on the Foreign Policy of the Islamic Republic of Iran in the 21st Century

Authors : Pouriya Angosht Baft, Farzan Safari Sabet

Abstract : Globalization should be considered as a process that has affected all areas of human activity, including the foreign policy of countries. The phenomenon of globalization has created tremendous changes in the economic, political and cultural fields. Obviously, no country can keep itself away from the new global consequences and globalization process. Dealing with the world requires formulating a realistic and intelligent foreign policy. By examining the phenomenon of globalization and its impact on foreign policy, this article aims to provide solutions for formulating a more active and effective foreign policy. The conclusion of this research is that Iran's foreign policy has gradually moved towards more realism, and maintaining and strengthening national interests in the changing world has been the focus of foreign policymakers and decision-makers. Strengthening the course of more realism in the future should be at the center of formulating Iran's foreign policy.

Keywords : globalization, foreign policy, international relations, realism, iran

Conference Title : ICLPS 2025 : International Conference on Law and Political Science

Conference Location : Tokyo, Japan

Conference Dates : May 27-28, 2025