

Italian Colonial Strategy in Libya the Conflict among Mediterranean Powers

Authors : Mohamed Basheer Abdul Atti Hassan

Abstract : If it is believed that a comprehensive inhibiting definition of geopolitics, it is a power analysis, which is to ultimately arrive at an evaluation of the political power of the state with all that this means and what is supposed of an analysis of its composition, characteristics, from a natural and human aspects, its resources, production, problems, and obstacles, as well as its ultimate goals and ideals. it can be stated safely that historical geopolitics is the geography of the present that was, or the full geography of the past. With this meaning, it is necessary, as it is useful, to follow the main outlines of the Italian history of Libya before it reach the contemporary map. The research paper will follow the main outlines of the Italian colonization in Libya in a descriptive historical geopolitical approach. In this study, it are also concerned with following the chain's links, not as drama in time, but as a strategy in place, so that it draws to us a map of power and the distribution of political formations throughout this period within and around Libya. From the sum of these variable distributions and successive balances, it can come up with the basic principles that determined the Italian history in Libya as a Mediterranean Sea power and formed its political entity, which are a compass of guidance and an indication of the future.
