

The Internationalism Approach for European Multilateral Foreign Policy Challenge Since the Second Term of Donald Trump as the President of the United States

Authors : Nguyen Ngoc Xuan Thu, Le Van Quyen

Abstract : The return of United States President Donald Trump in 2024 has significantly shifted the landscape of international relations, especially White House-Kremlin relations, with a deep look at security and economic foreign affairs in the European region. In comparison with Trump's previous term (2017-2022), his "America First " policy not only affects the regional security strategy of Europe but also reorients the way the West deals with Russia. This article will analyze in detail each aspect of Trump's policy from the perspective of internationalism and the consequences for Ukraine, NATO, and Eastern Europe, thereby assessing and forecasting the future foreign policy of this regional security for Donald Trump's second term.

Keywords : international relations, European multilateral foreign policy, internationalism, regional security and economic strategy

Conference Title : ICPSAIR 2025 : International Conference on Political Sciences and International Relations

Conference Location : Berlin, Germany

Conference Dates : May 15-16, 2025