

The Relationship between Romantic Relationship Beliefs and Ego Identity Process

Authors : Betül Demirbağ, Nesrin Demir

Abstract : As a developmental period, early adulthood has a vital role in romantic relationships in young adult's life. It's known that in this period, satisfaction of individual needs such as affiliation is essential for well-functioning and to be succeeded in sequent developmental task. Romantic relationships have an expected association with attachment style. But it's needed to get more information about indicators of romantic relationships in different cultural backgrounds. in this research it's aimed to investigate whether there is a relationship between romantic relationship beliefs and Ego identity status and also other possible indicators such as gender, age, socioeconomic status. Participants were undergraduate students training in various programs in Education Faculty in Adiyaman University. As data collection tool, Romantic Relationship Beliefs scale and Ego Identity Process Questionnaire which was adapted into Turkish were used. Results were discussed in the relevant literature.

Keywords : ego identity, romantic relationships, university counseling

Conference Title : ICPPS 2015 : International Conference on Psychology and Psychological Sciences

Conference Location : Paris, France

Conference Dates : May 18-19, 2015