

The Impact of Collective Punishment on Cadets' Psychology

Authors : Ersegün Ömer Erol

Abstract : Since the first civilizations, armies have been the most significant part of the countries. As generally known, in today's world, people are trying hard to find the best way to educate their armies so as to prepare them effectively for the war. Due to the fact that, as rarely known, collective punishment is in fact one of the methods used commonly in militaries in order to educate personnel and cadets. In this study, it is purposed to find out the constructive and unfavorable impacts of collective punishment on cadets' psychology and by comparing these impacts to decide whether the collective punishment is functional or not. These impacts are obtained from the questionnaire applied on cadets and personnel. The main goal of the study is to provide new point of views and more scientific information about the discussed education way-the collective punishment.

Keywords : army, cadet, collective punishment, psychology

Conference Title : ICSEUS 2015 : International Conference on Society, Economics and Urban Studies

Conference Location : Barcelona, Spain

Conference Dates : August 17-18, 2015