

The Level of Job Satisfaction among English as a Foreign Language Instructors

Authors : Hashem A. Alsamadani

Abstract : Identifying the level of job satisfaction has many positive benefits for both the worker and employer. The purpose of the study was to examine the overall level of job satisfaction among English as a Foreign Language (EFL) instructors. During the past years, multiple methods were utilized to collect data to determine the level of job satisfaction among teachers. This study was conducted using survey research method. A questionnaire was coded and analyzed using the SPSS. The findings revealed that the overall level of job satisfaction among EFL instructors is high. The study recommended improving conditions of instructors working at public universities so as to gain a high level of job satisfaction and improve outcomes of the teaching-learning process.

Keywords : job satisfaction, EFL teachers, Saudi Arabia, instruction

Conference Title : ICLLTL 2016 : International Conference on Linguistics, Language Teaching and Learning

Conference Location : Paris, France

Conference Dates : May 16-17, 2016