

Corruption and Income: Case of Independent Turkish Republic

Authors : Rahime Hülya Öztürk

Abstract : Along with the development of globalization, the relationship between economic, politic and commercial behaviors became unlimited. The liberalization of capital has many advantages for countries, but it also has some disadvantages. In these disadvantages the most important one is corruption. Especially in Developing Countries and Underdeveloped countries, corruption is very extensive. Corruption causes inefficient use of resources and promotes income inequality. Especially in the transition period of economies corruption increases and sometimes governments don't interfere. To fight against corruption domestic and international measures are taken. Corruption is an economic problem, but it also has social and moral effects. The aim of this study is to define the relationship between corruption and income in Independent Turkish State. In the first part of the study, the concept of corruption is examined. In the second part of the study, information about The Independent Turkish Republic is given. In the third part of the study, country's relationship between corruption and income is analyzed with panel data analysis.

Keywords : corruption, income, independent Turkish Republic, distribution of income

Conference Title : ICBPIM 2016 : International Conference on Business Process Integration and Management

Conference Location : Stockholm, Sweden

Conference Dates : July 11-12, 2016