

Crossing Borders: A Case Study on the Entry and Asylum of Sirius Refugees in Turkey

Authors : Stephanie M. De Oliveira

Abstract : For a long time, migrations are characterized as a difficult problem to solve. Various phenomena throughout human history caused personnel migrations, whether by the free will of migrants or not. Nowadays, governments that seek to give these people protection and dignity, either to asylum or to build a new life in a different country, make refugee protection. At present, a large amount of people, have been crossing their country's borders by land, air or sea, becoming refugees and seeking a new life away from fear, threat or violence they suffered in their country of origin. It is known that some countries have already instituted rights and rules for refugees who wish to become citizens in the country to which they immigrated, even though this is not what happens in most cases. The article will be based on research made with UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR) material as well as will analyze the interaction of the Turkish government with the European Union. Since Turkey is not part of the Union, it will be understood how the interaction was made, as well as the search for consensus, and not only humanitarian but also financial aid. The treatment of refugees and the defense of human rights within the country will also be considered.

Keywords : refugees, Turkey, asylum seekers, United Nations

Conference Title : ICPSIR 2017 : International Conference on Political Science and International Relations

Conference Location : Copenhagen, Denmark

Conference Dates : June 11-12, 2017