

Using a Character's Inner Monologue for Song Analysis

Authors : Robert Roznowski

Abstract : The thought process of the character is never more evident than when singing alone onstage. The composer scores the emotional state and the lyricist voices the inner conflict as the character shares with an audience her or his deepest feelings. It is at these moments that a character may be thought of as voicing her or his inner monologue. Using examples from several musical theatre songs, this presentation will look at a codified approach to analyze a song from a more psychological perspective. Using the clues from the score, traditional character analysis and a psychological-based scoring method an actor may explore more fully inhabit and express the sung and unsung thoughts of the character. The approach yields a richer and more complex approach to acting the song.

Keywords : acting, analysis, musical theatre, psychology

Conference Title : ICMTAS 2018 : International Conference on Musical Theatre, Acting and Singing

Conference Location : London, United Kingdom

Conference Dates : July 26-27, 2018